NOTICE.

COMPILERS of music books are informed, that the special labors of the author of the present publication, have not been confined to the pieces which bear his own signature. They extend almost to the entire volume,—giving by every fair principle of interpretation, a corresponding extension to the copy-right.

C. DINGLEY,
MUSIC TYPOGRAPHER.

D. FANSHAW, PRINTER.

P R E F A C E .

THE present volume is not designed as a substitute for any of the author's previous publications. "Musica Sacra," if we except the Appendix, the Anthems, and the few original pieces of a smaller size which it embraces, may be said to contain chiefly the old standard melodies of the church, which are now found in various styles of arrangement in most of the popular Collections of the country. Though these melodies will continue in favor for many years, perhaps centuries, to come ; they are not alone sufficient to satisfy the increasing demand for devotional music.

The volume entitled "Spiritual Songs," was intended for private and social uses, rather than for choirs and congregations ; and the selection as well as the arrangement of the pieces, had special reference to this design.

The "Miscellany" which grew out of the late Musical Magazine, has been well received ; but its size is not sufficient fully to meet the demand for new music. How far this demand is real or artificial ; or how far it proceeds from the natural progress of science and taste, or from an undue regard to the claims of novelty, it is difficult to say : but the demand, such as it is, must, in a measure, be satisfied with timely supplies. In a country like ours, there will be no want of unworthy materials, such as may possess temporary attraction ; and the surest way to secure the public taste from their deleterious influence, is, to furnish, to a convenient extent, materials of a better character. How far this important object will be effected by the present selection is left for the public to decide.

Most of the materials here presented will strike the reader as new. Many of the pieces are original. A portion of these was sent by various hands, to the Compiler, in an unfinished state, with the expectation that he would correct and publish them or lay them aside at his option. The decision on such occasions was to have sole reference to the principle of utility. Specimens of a finished character have also been contributed to this work, for which we desire to express our grateful acknowledgments. Nor should we forget to mention that interesting materials have been kindly put into our hands, by gentlemen of taste, who have recently returned from Europe. No pains have been spared to enrich the selection by every variety which Europe or America could afford. In relation to this matter, it would be easy to bring forward an array of great names and learned authorities : but we are willing that the present volume should speak for itself ; and stand or fall solely on the ground of its intrinsic character. That it may contribute to the promotion of good taste and serve, through the Divine blessing, to advance the interests of religious edification, is the sincere prayer of

THE COMPILER.

RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC.

SO MUCH attention is of late bestowed upon elementary instruction, that every collection of sacred music must be furnished with the details of the art. In presenting these, however, we shall have less reference to the wants of primary schools and juvenile classes than to those of choirs and classes of adults. There is at present, we rejoice to say, no want of printed Manuals in reference to the instruction of children: yet, in regard to the training of choirs, the best teachers among us, have need of additional helps and facilities. The order of topics here presented is not that which would always be preferred in giving an extended course of instruction. Its advantages will be the most obvious in connection with the special purposes here mentioned.

The inductive method is now universally adopted among teachers of note; and he that would fully understand it and reduce it to practice should not rest satisfied with consulting any single authority, however eminently distinguished. No one should be a servile imitator. No two men were ever alike in all things; and something useful may be derived from consulting a variety of methods. We do not wish other teachers to follow us any farther than their experience corresponds with ours. We say this after full thirty years of active labor in the field of cultivation; and all we ask in return is, that others will extend toward us the same sentiments of liberality.

The details before us may not improperly be presented under two distinct heads. We shall speak

I, OF NOTATION; AND II, OF STYLE.

PART I.

OF NOTATION.

SECTION I.—OF THE OCTAVE.

1. The Octave, familiarly termed the eight notes, is the basis of harmony and melody.

2. A thorough knowledge of the octave must be acquired by imitation, and matured by persevering practice. Great accuracy is indispensable.

3. The different sounds of the Octave, called degrees, may be thus numbered:

4. In the early stages of practice, the voice is directed by the aid of arbitrary syllables; such as faw, sol, law, mi, &c.; or, *do, re, mi, faw, sol, la, si.

As each of these series has its special advantages and disadvantages, we exhibit both to our readers, leaving every teacher to make his own selection.

* Other syllables have sometimes been adopted; also letters and ciphers. Some teachers, of eminence too, prefer to set all such facilities aside. For the latter course we see, in vocal music, no sufficient reason: helps are greatly needed.

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

FAW, SOL, LAW, FAW, SOL, LAW, MI, FAW; FAW, MI, LAW, SOL, FAW, LAW, SOL, FAW.
DO, RE, MI, FAW, SOL, LAW, SI, DO; DO, SI, LAW, SOL, FAW, MI, RE, DO.

5. Let the octave be practised in one of these series of syllables, more or less rapidly, and with different forms of accent, till in due time, the syllables by the power of association, will readily bring the sounds to mind.

6. Select portions or fragments of the octave may next be attempted, with corresponding syllables, as in the following example :

ASCENDING.

DESCENDING.

For farther exercises of this nature, see Practical Lessons. The teacher will do well to extend the illustrations occasionally upon his black-board.

7. As fragments of the octave, variously combined, constitute regular portions of melody, such passages as the following will now be read with little difficulty, so far as sounds and names are concerned :

Part of the tune DUKE STREET.

1 3 4 5 6 7 8 7 6 5 — — — 6 5 4 3 2

Part of the tune PREPARATION.

1 2 3 4 5 6 5 2 3 4 5 4 3 2 3 2 3 4 5 6 5

The figures in these examples, refer to the intervals of the octave. But the learner must apply the appropriate syllables.

SECTION II.—OF NOTES AND RESTS.

8. The proportional length of sounds is designated by the six characters following, viz: the

Semibreve,	Minim,	Crotchet,	Quaver,	Semiquaver,	Demisemiquaver.

9. The proportional length of the notes is, as one to two, in the order just presented: i. e., the semibreve equals two minims; the minim equals two crotchets; the crotchet, two quavers, &c. Or, to speak in the language of numerals, semibreves are units, minims are halves, crotchets are quarters, quavers are eighths, semiquavers are sixteenths, and demisemiquavers are thirty-seconds.

10. The six characters are called Notes.

11. Rests are marks of silence. Of these there are six, bearing the names and proportions of the notes, just described.

RESTS.

Semibreve.	Minim.	Crotchet.	Quaver.	Semiquaver.	Demisemiquaver.

12. Time is computed by counting and beating in a regular manner, according to the character of a given movement. In the following example two beats are applied to the semibreve, one beat to the minim, and half a beat to the crotchet.

The letter d stands for the downward motion of the hand, and the letter u for the up-

1.2 1, 2, 1 - 2 - 1,2 1, 2, &c.

The teacher may present additional exercises on the black-board, in quavers, semi-quavers, &c. See also, Practical Lessons.

13. Time is farther modified by the Point, which, when placed at the right hand of a note or rest, adds to it one half of its previous value. Thus, a pointed semibreve equals three minims, instead of two; a pointed minim equals three crotchets, &c. When notes are twice pointed, they receive an addition of three-fourths to their value.

ward motion. The hand should move suddenly at equal intervals of time, while the pupil pronounces, audibly, the numbers one, two, one, two, &c. When this exercise becomes familiar, let the passages be sung while the beating continues.

SECTION III.—OF THE NATURAL SCALE AND ITS TRANSPOSITIONS.

14. The octave as described in Section I, is not always written upon the same lines and spaces. The rules for its location will be understood by a delineation of the scales.

15. Music is written upon five lines with their spaces, called a Staff.

16. Short lines occasionally added, for very high or low sounds, are called leger lines.

17. The lines and spaces of the staff are named by the first seven letters of the alphabet,—A, B, C, D, E, F, G.

18. The situation of the letters in naming the staff, is designated by the clefs, of which there are two in common use,—the F Clef, used for Base, and the G Clef, used for Treble, Alto, and Tenor.

The F CLEF.

The G CLEF.

19. The lines and spaces of the staff are called degrees.

20. The degrees of the staff, according to the F and the G clefs, are thus named : *

According to the F Clef—

According to the G Clef—

21. The following exhibits the two staves in connection, with the octave written upon each :

Here we have the two octaves, embracing an extent of fifteen notes ; the treble octave commencing on the same degree where the base octave terminates. Notes, extending higher or lower, belong in a similar manner to adjoining octaves.

22. The scale, thus exhibited, presents the ascending series, quite as unbroken as if written upon a staff of eleven lines. The connection between the base and treble staves is easily apprehended.

For the purpose of illustration, the treble staff may be considered as a system of leger lines above the base ; and the base staff as a system of leger lines below the treble.

23. Adult voices of males and females while engaged in singing the same melody after the ordinary manner, may seem to be singing in perfect unison ; but the truth is, the voices of the two sexes thus employed, preserve uniformly the distance of an octave from each other. When the tenor, therefore, sing from the G clef-staff, they are expected to sing an octave lower than the notes are written ; and the pitch is regulated accordingly.*

* These should be well committed to memory.

24. When the octave, of which we have been speaking, commences upon C, as in the last example, the scale is said to be natural.

25. Other locations of the octave are termed transpositions ; and these are indicated by

N. B. Those who use the four syllables instead of the seven, may omit the next three articles and pass on to article 29.

26. A flat placed upon the seventh interval of an octave, converts that interval into the fourth of a new octave ; and hence, in the application of the seven syllables, do, re, mi, &c., the syllable si, in the one scale, marks the place of faw in the other scale, as in the first example on the next page :

* Thus, in the last example a gentleman's pitch will be exactly the same whether he sings from the base or the treble staff. Formerly the tenor and the low treble voice parts were written in connection with a specific clef, thus marked :

which, though placed as occasion required, upon different lines, always represented the letter and the sound of C like that of the leger line between the base and the treble. The Germans have a different character for their C clef, which is uniformly placed upon the first line for the soprano or high voice of females. The French have sometimes placed the G clef on the first line instead of the second, and the F clef upon the third line instead of the fourth. But in such cases, and in all others of a similar nature, the performer has only to regard the clef as the representative of one of the seven letters, while the remaining six have a corresponding location.

S: marks the place of FAW. Si marks the place of FAW.

Do, RE, MI, FAW, SOL, LAW, SI, Do. Do, RE, MI, FAW, SOL, LAW, SI, Do.

27. The flats being placed in rows, (see example at article 31,) it is necessary in this system of syllables, only to observe that the last flat added, always marks the place of FAW, while the other syllables are regulated accordingly. Thus, if a flat is placed upon B, faw is upon B; if a second flat is found at E, faw is found at E, &c.

28. A sharp placed upon the fourth interval of an octave, converts that interval into the seventh of a new octave: Hence the syllable FAW in the one scale marks the place of si in the other. If a sharp, therefore, is placed upon F, the syllable si is found upon F; if a second sharp occurs at the letter C, the same syllable is transferred to that place, &c. As the sharps stand in rows, it is necessary only to observe, that the last one which is added marks the place of the syllable si, while the other syllables have a corresponding location. See Signatures, article 31.

Let the teacher write some of the scales thus indicated, upon the black-board, and refer to others in the body of this work.

N. B. Those who use seven syllables instead of four, may omit the next two articles and pass on to article 31.

29. In the application of the four ordinary syllables, faw, sol, law, mi, to the seven sounds of the octave, (see article 4,) the practice is to ascertain the location of the syllable mi, leaving the other syllables to have a corresponding arrangement. Thus, in the natural scale, (see article 24,) the syllable mi is found upon the line B; but if a flat is found upon B, the syllable mi is removed to E, &c. Or, if a sharp is placed upon F, the syllable mi is removed to F, &c., as in the following table:

This Table should be thoroughly committed to memory.

In the Natural Scale, mi is upon B; but
If B be flat mi is removed to E.		If F be sharp, mi is removed to F.
" B and E be flat A.		" F and C be sharp C.
" B, E, and A, be flat . . D.		" F, C, and G be sharp . . G.
" B, E, A, and D be flat . G.		" F, C, G, and D be sharp . D.

30. A greater number of flats and sharps is seldom used in psalmody; but in every given case let the learner observe, that the last flat which occurs in the series, marks the place of his second ascending faw; while the last sharp which occurs, marks with the same uniformity the place of the syllable mi. Five flats, therefore, remove the mi to C, and six remove it to F. Five sharps remove it to A, and six remove it to E.*

31. Flats or sharps at the commencement of a tune, to mark the transpositions of the octave, (see article 25,) are called the Signature. The following table exhibits the first five notes of the octave, according to the signatures in common use. See next page:

* Let the teacher place all the flats and sharps in rows upon the black-board, after the form of the signatures laid down in article 31, showing the first, the second, the third flat or sharp, &c., in the series; but, let him not here perplex the learner, as is too often done, with the abstruse principles which relate to the subject. These will be more easily inculcated at a subsequent stage in the progress of the pupils.

The entire Scales may be written upon the black-board, by the dictation of the pupils, or otherwise. The location of syllables should also be shown.

SECTION IV.—OF TIME, ACCENT, &c.

32. Tunes or strains of music, are divided by the single bar into small, equal portions, called measures. A measure is the distance between two single bars :

33. The measures are also regarded as consisting severally of parts or subdivisions, expressed by appropriate figures at the clef.

34. Time, with respect to the measures, is either common, triple, or compound. Under each of these descriptions there are several varieties.

35. In common time the parts of the measures are expressed by even numbers, such as 4s and 2s. In triple time they are expressed by 3s; and in compound by 6s.

36. The figures placed beneath those which indicate the parts of the measures, refer to portions of the semibreve's value in duration: thus, the figures $\frac{4}{4}$ express not only four parts of the measure, but four crotchets. The figures $\frac{3}{2}$ in like manner express three parts of the measure and three minims. See the next examples.

37. The parts of the measure generally require a corresponding number of beats, though psalmody admits of some exceptions in this respect.

38. Accent is a stress of voice applied in common time to the first, or the first and third parts of the measure; in triple time to the first part of the measure; and in compound time to the first and fourth parts of the measure.

39. When shorter notes occur, which are of equal length among themselves, a subordinate accent arises at the third, fifth, seventh, &c., while the alternate notes are unaccented.

N. B. In the following examples the large figures indicate the varieties of time; and the small figures the beats and subdivisions or parts of the measures: The principal accents are marked A, the subordinate accents a, and the unaccented notes u.

40. When the movement in compound time is rapid, three parts of a measure are taken to each beat, so that two beats answer the purpose of the six abovementioned. In this case there is but one principal accent in a measure:

A,u,u, a, u, u, A, u, a, u. A,u,u, a, u, u, A, u, a, u.

PARTS & BEATS. 1 2 3 4 5 6 1 2 3 4 5 6 PARTS & BEATS. 1 2 3 4 5 6 1 2 3 4 5 6

41. As the first and second varieties of common time have each a semibreve for their measure note, it used to be the custom to designate them by placing a large semibreve at the clef. The semibreve, when a bar was drawn through it, signified but half the number of parts and beats. In later times, without much reason, the semicircle or letter C was substituted; and it is still retained in most collections. The semicircle answers to $\frac{4}{4}$ above described, while the barred semicircle answers to $\frac{3}{2}$. For examples see next page.

ACCENTS. A, u, A u, A, u, A, u, A, A, u, a, a, A, u, a, u.

PARTS & BEATS. 1 2 3 4 1 2 3 4 1 2 3 4 1 2 3 4 1 2 3 4 1 2 3 4

42. Other varieties of time are occasionally used, but being marked by appropriate figures at the clef, their nature will be readily understood. Thus, $\frac{4}{2}$ indicates four minims, and four parts and beats in a measure; and $\frac{4}{8}$ the same number of quavers, parts and beats in a measure.

Let the pupils here define the signification of $\frac{12}{8}$ $\frac{9}{8}$ $\frac{5}{4}$ &c.

43. The terms Largo, Adagio, Allegro, Presto, &c., have a farther influence upon the movement. See Table of Technical Terms. In the higher species of musical composition it often happens by this means, that music written in one variety of time is actually performed in another. Much, in these cases, is left to the taste and discrimination of the performer.

44. In Psalmody, the subject of song as contained in the words of a hymn, has great influence upon the movement. See Part II, Section VI.

SECTION V.—OF TONES, SEMITONES, ACCIDENTALS.

45. The degrees of the octave as presented in Section First, though they appear equal among themselves to the eye of the observer, are in reality unequal; and upon this inequality, rests the whole structure of musical composition.

46. The larger intervals are called tones and the smaller intervals semitones.* Of the latter there are two in every regular octave, found in the scales thus far described, between the third and fourth, and the seventh and eighth degrees. The rest of the intervals are tones.

47. The pupil having acquired his practical knowledge of the octave by imitation, will readily adjust the tones and semitones it contains, by the mere application of the appropriate syllables,—faw, sol, law,—do, re, mi, &c.

48. But, as in the process of melody it often happens that the order of tones and semitones is temporarily changed; such variations must be marked by significant characters, such as flats, sharps, and naturals, accompanied with altered syllables. See article 52.

49. Flats, sharps, and naturals are not properly said to form a signature, (see article 31,) except when placed at the beginning of a strain or tune. When they occur in the midst of the movement they are called accidentals.

50. Flats used as accidentals, require a semitonic depression of the voice, and sharps thus used, require a semitonic elevation. Naturals restore these altered intervals to their primitive sounds.

51. The influence of flats and sharps generally extends through a single measure, unless counteracted by a natural. But when one measure ends and another commences with the same sound, the accidental is not always repeated. In other circumstances the single bar answers the specific purpose of a natural.

52. In singing the altered notes, it is generally advisable to make corresponding alterations of music syllables. The syllables faw, sol, law,—do, re, for example, where sounds are to be elevated, may become fi, si, li,—di, ri, in imitation of the sound mi, pronounced mee; and where notes are to be depressed by flats or naturals, the syllables may conveniently be changed in their terminations so as to rhyme with the word lay; thus, do becomes day, law becomes lay, and faw becomes fay.*

Other alterations are sometimes recommended: but in every case the object should be to bring distinctly to mind the interval of a semitone.

EXAMPLES.

Faw, Sol, Law, Si, Law, Sol, Fi, Sol, Faw, Law, Sol, Law, May, May, Law, Mi, Faw.
Do, Sol, Law, Si, Law, Sol, Fi, Sol, Faw, Mi, Sol, Law, Say, Say, Law, Si, Do.

Faw, Law, Sol, Fi, Fi, Sol, Faw, Mi, Faw, May, Law, Faw, Sol, Fi, Sol, Faw, Law.
Do, Mi, Re, Di, Di, Re, Do, Si, Do, Say, Law, Do, Re, Fi, Sol, Faw, Mi.

53. Naturals which counteract the influence of sharps, bring the voice downward one semitone; while those which destroy the influence of flats, require semitonic elevations. Both cases are illustrated in the above example. See Practical Lessons.

The teacher would do well to introduce to his pupils, short, simple examples of accidentals, at an early stage of progress, giving them out for imitation before he exhibits them to the eye. This will be of great service.

SECTION VI.—REMAINING CHARACTERS.

54. The characters which remain to be described will scarcely admit of a regular classification. They are the brace, double-bar, close, repeat, pause, the figure three, choosing-notes, marks of distinction, the slur, the crescendo, the diminuendo, the swell, appoggiatures and after-notes, and abbreviations.

* This we fancy will be regarded as an improvement upon the older method.

55. The Brace includes different parts which are sung together; such as base, tenor, alto, treble, &c.

56. The Double Bar marks the end of a strain in music, and in some books, the end of a tune.

57. The Close is used by some authors to signify the end of a piece of music.

58. A Repeat shows that a certain passage or strain is to be sung twice at every performance of the tune which contains it. The figures 1 and 2, or the words first-time and second-time, often refer to small clauses of music, the one of which is to be sung before repeating and the other after repeating.

59. The Pause, sometimes called the Hold, marks an indefinite suspension of the time of a note or rest. The same character in ancient psalmody marks the end of a line of poetry. See Old 100, page 35.

60. The Figure Three placed over or under any three notes, reduces them in value to the time of two of the same denomination. Thus, a triplet of three crotchets occupies the specific time of two crotchets. When a number of triplets succeed each other, the figure is often omitted after the first insertion. In secular music two triplets are sometimes combined, as represented by a figure 6.

61. Choosing Notes standing one over another, leave the vocalist to make his own selection. Sometimes two distinct parts are thus written upon the same staff, as first and second treble, &c.

62. Marks of Distinction show that the sound of notes is to be abbreviated as if little rests were placed between them. See example as above. The Dot is sometimes used for a similar purpose.

63. The Slur is drawn over or under any two or more notes that belong to one syllable. When quavers or smaller notes are united by their own hooks, the same purpose is answered. See Holwell, page 54. When pairs of quavers or semiquavers thus united, succeed each other, a slur is sometimes added, to show that the second note of the several couplets is to be shortened, as in the case of marks of distinction. See Wesley, page 256.*

64. The mark Crescendo placed over a note or series of notes, requires a gradual increase of sound.

65. The mark Diminuendo denotes a gradual decrease of sound.
66. The Swell denotes a gradual increase of sound followed by a diminution.

In psalmody, where the same tune is applied to an endless variety of stanzas, the crescendo, diminuendo and swell, should often be introduced by the performer, though they are seldom written in connection with the music. See Article 115.

67. Appoggiatures are small notes placed before some of the principal notes of the measures. As the measures are full without them, the notes which immediately follow them must be proportionably reduced in length. See the example as given above.

68. After Notes are small characters which borrow their time from notes which immediately precede them.

Appoggiatures are generally accented; after-notes are always unaccented. As a general rule, they deduct their own nominal value from the notes on which they depend. An appoggiatura, before a pointed note, however, takes twice its nominal value.

69. Abbreviations occur chiefly in instrumental music, where they are of much use. They are of kinds too numerous for exemplification. The single example above must suffice.

SECTION VII.—OF KEYS; MAJOR AND MINOR SCALES.

70. The first note of the ascending or descending octave is called a key.

71. The octave we have already described, (see article 46,) is in the major scale. Article 21 exhibits, therefore, what is properly termed the natural major scale, of which C, found in the base, tenor, treble, &c., is the key-note. The examples at article 31, are mere transpositions of the major scale, entirely resembling each other in the successions of tones and semitones.

72. By a specific change in the order of tones and semitones the octave forms a different kind of scale, which is called minor.

* See also in "Musica Sacra," the well known passages in the Dying Christian, 'Cease, fond nature,' 'Hark, they whisper,' &c. Some compilers have omitted the slur in such passages, not knowing, perhaps, its meaning.

When the two semitones of any octave are found, the one between the third and fourth, and the other between the seventh and eighth degrees, the scale is major; but when the one is found between the second and third in the ascending and descending series, and the other between the seventh and eighth in the ascending, and between the fifth and sixth in the descending series, the scale is minor. This is the specific difference.

73. The natural major scale, as we have seen, commences upon C. The natural minor scale commences upon A.

N. B. The minims here represent the key—and the slurs show the places of the two semitones.

74. The sounds of the octave in the minor scale, like those in the major, may be readily acquired by imitation, especially as the music syllables will bring their accustomed intervals to mind. The difference between the ascending and the descending series must be well understood.

75. The upper part of the ascending minor series contains the same successions of tones and semitones as that of the major scale; the syllables appertaining to that portion of the major scale may, therefore, occasionally be resorted to, for the purpose of securing accurate intonation.

Sol, Law, Mi, Faw; Law, Fi, Si, Law.
Sol, Law Si, Do; Mi, Fi, Si, Law.

76. The natural minor scale, as we have seen, commences on A, which is two degrees below the commencement of the major scale. It possesses also the same relation in all the transpositions, i. e., two degrees below the major scale.

77. Tunes in the minor scale require great accuracy of intonation. See Practical Lessons; also the tunes Moreland, page 101, and Roydon, page 104.

78. The last note in the base is the key-note. The young pupil, therefore, may easily distinguish minor from major keyed tunes, by the music syllable which is applied to the note in question. Faw or do represents the major, and law the minor.

SECTION VIII.—OF MODULATION.

79. Modulation is the act of passing from one scale to another, by means of accidentals; as when we pass from G major to D major, by placing an accidental sharp upon C.

From G major to D major.

Sol, Law, Mi, Faw; Law, Fi, Si, Law.
Sol, Law Si, Do; Mi, Fi, Si, Law.

80. Accidentals, especially in psalmody, are used chiefly for two purposes. The one is that which relates to the minor scale, mentioned in the last section; and the other is that which produces modulation. In the one case, the accidentals seem to have no special connection with the signature of the piece; in the other they maintain the closest relations to the signature.

81. When accidentals occur that might form regular additions to the signature, or regular deductions from it, the nature of the modulation must appear obvious. In the signatures, the sharps observe the following order, viz: F, C, G, D, A, E, &c.; and the flats, that of B, E, A, D, G, C, &c.; (see article 31,) and when the naturals are employed to counteract them, they begin with the last of the series, going backward in the inverse order.

MODULATIONS BY SHARPS AND NATURALS.

MODULATIONS BY FLATS AND NATURALS.

Modulations of this nature are continually occurring in psalmody, though the tune commences and ends in the principal key. See article 70.

82. Modulations of the above character may not improperly be regarded as temporary changes of signature. See article 30.

83. When a sharp (or natural, having a similar effect,) occurs as an accidental, that can have no influence upon the signature, the scale is generally minor, and the key for the time being, is found one degree above the sharp.

MODULATIONS.

84. It is obvious that F and D sharp, as in the above example, cannot alone constitute a signature; and the same is true of B♭, in connection with C♯. See article 81. When two adjoining intervals are thus elevated by accidentals, the scale is minor, and the key is one degree above the higher of the two accidentals.

MODULATIONS.

85. Here it is obvious, that F, C, and D sharp, in the above example, cannot constitute a regular signature while G is natural; and equally so, that B♭, B♮, and G♯ form no regular combination. The accidentals are inserted to mark the ascending 6th and 7th of the minor scale.

86. When accidentals that cannot be added to the signature, have the effect of depressing notes, it may then be known that the key remains on the same letter, while the scale is changed from major to minor.

EXAMPLES.

Sometimes two or more flats or sharps that affect the signature, are introduced at the same moment in the several parts of the score. In this case they may not seem to each observer to be regular. In other cases, they seem by a sort of license, to assume something of the nature of appoggiatures or after-notes, as in the tune "Thine, Lord, for ever," at the third and eleventh measures, and in the symphony near the end. But a perfect knowledge of modulation implies an acquaintance with the science of harmony. The preceding practical hints must suffice.

PART II.

OF STYLE.

87. Many of the sad disputes and unhappy diversities of opinion, which have arisen among musicians, might easily have been prevented, by a careful reference to the great fundamental principles which relate to the subject of style.

88. The things most essential to a good style of execution in vocal music, are Tone, Intonation, Time, Articulation, Accent and Emphasis, and Expression.

A few hints in relation to these requisites, are all that can be expected of us in the present connection.

SECTION I.—OF TONE.

89. The word tone has two distinct significations. The one refers to the degrees of scales, (Part I, Sections V, VII, and VIII,) and the other to the mere qualities of a sound separately considered. We here use the term in the latter sense.

90. A fine voice is not simply the gift of nature. More depends on cultivation. In song, as in speech, there will be family resemblances, which are acquired and perpetuated by habitual imitation. Distinguished teachers will also have multitudes of imitators in this respect. Towns and cities and large districts of country will thus acquire in process of time, the same leading peculiarities, especially where defects instead of beauties, become the subjects of general imitation. Hence the importance of good instruction.

91. A good tone is gradually formed by exercising the voice upon the open vowels. The broad sound of a, as in law, the sound of o, as in soul, of u, as in tune, may be first tried. The mouth should be well open, the lips removed from the teeth, and the teeth so held as to admit the first joint of the fore-finger between them. Let the vowels receive a loud, clear utterance, as coming deep from the throat. This will enable the pupil in most cases, to avoid all nasal, guttural, dental, and labial defects, which are so displeasing to the cultivated ear.

92. A second step in this process is to give utterance in a similar manner to the slender and the short vowels,—e, as in theme or them, i, as in time or till. These vowels should be a little modified for the sake of tone, yet so delicately as not to destroy their identity, or in the least to injure their character. I, for instance, should not become oi, as in toil, but aye, as heard in our halls of legislation, in token of assent. The diphthongal character of this letter, as if written ay—ee, should also be preserved, in which the ee occupies but an instant, just as the sound ceases. Similar directions might be given in reference to the slender sound of a, as in name; while the sound of e long, as in theme, scarcely admits of the slightest modification.

93. Intensity or feebleness, harshness or softness, pleasantness or unpleasantness of tone, lies much under the power of cultivation; and the same remark applies equally to the management of the breath. Breathing should be free and not labored. It should be performed in a noiseless manner by the action of the chest at an instant while the mouth is quite open.

The right formation of the voice is an object of great importance. The process is gradual, and requires time. Exercises of the above nature should be frequently interspersed with those which relate to notation in Part I. The precise order of method, is, comparatively, of little consequence.

SECTION II.—OF INTONATION.

94. By intonation is meant the management of the voice in reference to musical scales. This faculty is by no means the result of native instinct, as many seem to suppose, but is acquired by imitation, habit, instruction, and experience.

95. As the two modern scales, major and minor, (see Part I. Sec. VII,) are in a great measure artificial, it ought not to surprise us that the art of true intonation, is never acquired without instruction and practice.

The ancient Greeks, with all their learning, were never known to sing scales like ours. The same is at present true, and ever has been, of the semi-barbarous nations.

96. Imitation should commence in infancy, and cultivation, in early childhood. Experience abundantly proves that when this is done, the result is uniformly successful.

97. The voice in regard to intonation, becomes less manageable in proportion as it has long been neglected or biased by bad example, or vitiated by wrong instruction. In the period of adult years it seldom acquires habits that are entirely new. In this respect it resembles the provincialisms of a native dialect. Hence the importance of early cultivation.

98. The most gifted vocalists are liable to occasional inaccuracies of intonation. The best teachers and choirs have the same liability. The best musical ear becomes comparatively dull by neglect; nor can it be preserved without appropriate exercise in reference to scales and harmonic combinations.

99. Physical causes have much influence over the faculty of which we here speak. Timidity, animation, indolence, fatigue, disgust, or perplexity—the oppression of cold or heat—the relative position of singers—the action of accompanying voices or instruments, are among the circumstances to be taken into the account. And these have an influence, even upon the best singers, much in proportion to their neglect of practice.

100. Pupils should frequently be exercised upon the major and minor scales, and upon the simplest chords and successions, during their whole period of instruction. The more difficult combinations and passages should also be occasionally selected from the tunes that contain them, and written upon the black-board as exercises.

101. The power of preserving just intonation, is in every instance, gradually acquired; and when once acquired, is easily lost by negligence. Hence the importance of frequent practice. The hymn of praise should never be omitted in family worship; and the members of the choir should not neglect the regular meetings for rehearsal. Bad intonation will be the inevitable consequence. The idea, that nature makes all the difference among singers is entirely destitute of foundation.

SECTION III.—OF TIME.

102. The importance of time as a property in music, is generally admitted; yet there is almost everywhere observable, a great want of accuracy in keeping time. This is chiefly owing to deficient cultivation.

103. The power of keeping time with due regularity, depends simply on forming, in a patient manner, habits of ready, accurate computation.

104. In addition to the ordinary exercises of beating, and counting, and calculating the various dimensions of notes and measures, and forms of accent, (see Part I, Section IV,) there should be frequent drillings on time, interspersed with the subsequent exercises and rehearsals of a school.

105. Accurate time adds great beauty to performances, especially where movements are vivacious and rhythmical. Liberties by far too great are often taken with the movement, by inexperienced leaders, in favor of the punctuations of language. Liberties to some extent, may of course be occasionally taken; but of these we shall speak hereafter under the head of Expression.

SECTION IV.—OF ARTICULATION.

106. The importance of just articulation in religious music* is evident from the single fact, that in devotional singing, the words are by divine appointment, the basis of song, and the means of edification. To worship in an unknown tongue, or in language rendered unintelligible through an indistinct utterance, is doubtless displeasing to the great Master of assemblies.

107. Vowels are, in reality, the only letters to be sung. The consonants are to be uttered at certain given instants, as in speech, only with greater distinctness and precision. In the word first, for example, the i only can be sung, while, in the first instance, the f, and subsequently, the rst, are whispered.

108. As the character of tone depends chiefly on the manner in which the vowels are treated; so the distinctness of articulation has its chief dependance upon the consonants.

109. Teachers should to this end study the powers of letters, and become familiar with the classes and subdivisions. The semivowels should never be prolonged; the sibilants should be checked, while the mutes and the aspirates should have augmented power.

110. The breath should never be taken in the midst of a word, but as far as possible, at those places where pauses of some nature, whether written or not, are required by the structure of the language.

111. The first efforts in articulation will necessarily be rude; and for a while they will give harshness both to the language and to the song, but let the teacher persevere; for time, patience, and industry will effect wonders. The process of drilling, is, to go from vowels and diphthongs to semivowels, mutes, &c., and thence to syllables, words, phrases, sentences, and stanzas.

112. The teacher must be thorough and systematic in his efforts or the desired object will never be accomplished; yet he should not perplex his pupils with a multiplicity of nice distinctions and observances. In schools, of the ordinary character, example will go farther than precept. Rules should be few, but oral illustrations abundant. Neither the language nor the song, will ultimately suffer by the union which is thus perfected.

113. Exercises should be often repeated during a whole course of instruction.

SECTION V.—OF ACCENT AND EMPHASIS.

114. Accent and emphasis are as important to the simple purposes of melody, harmony and rhythm, as they are indispensable to the claims of language. Articulation without these aids, would present nothing but dull successions of unmeaning syllables.

115. Musical notation as we have seen, (Part I, Section IV,) makes regular provision for that stress of voice which is called accent; while emphasis is more commonly indicated by certain marks of expression, such as the crescendo, diminuendo, swell, &c. But in psalmody, where the same tune is sung in a great variety of stanzas, the words must occasionally interfere with this arrangement.

116. When the rhythm of the music does not correspond with that of the words in reference to accent and emphasis, the greatest delicacy of management is required. The musical accents may be weakened or augmented in power, but not destroyed. Musical accents, as they occur in a given movement, are for the most part equal among themselves, excepting the secondary ones, which are of a subordinate character. But, when the accent or emphasis of words interferes with this arrangement, the conflicting claims must be adjusted, by the application of plain common sense principles. The words must, as a general rule in such cases, take precedence of the music.

* In music of a secular character, it often happens that the words are not fit to be heard.

117. Much depends on the formation of right habits under the guidance of an intelligent instructor. The manner of the pupils will of necessity be syllabic in the first instance; but let one thing be attempted at a time, and the whole process will not be difficult. The teacher must himself be governed by definite principles. He must understand and exemplify the powers of language. But in the present state of musical science, the multitude of learners will become better imitators than theorists.

SECTION VI.—OF EXPRESSION.

118. The preceding properties, tone, intonation, time, articulation, and accent and emphasis, relate to what may be termed, accurate mechanical execution. Much time and labor will be required to enable the pupil so fully to master these properties, as to secure an easy flowing enunciation of the language, in connection with the sweetness and regularity of the melody. Hence most singers are found to rest satisfied with this single achievement, and even to come far short of it, in practice. This is, of course, inexcusable. The principles of such a style are easily communicated; to reduce them to practice is the chief labor. The finishing touches of cultivation are much neglected.

119. Accurate mechanical execution, however beautiful in itself, is not alone sufficient for the purposes of song; especially where amusement is not the principal object of the performance. Mere mechanism cannot secure the claims of sentiment. There must be something which makes an appeal to the affections of the mind. That property or union of properties which accomplishes this result, constitutes expression.

120. Expression as thus defined, is the crowning excellence of song. It is as the soul of poetry, the pathos of eloquence, the life of historic painting. Without it, the most labored performances will be, in a great measure, powerless. There may be mannerism, skill of execution, display of taste. There may be much of mimicry or of noise, much to please the ear or astonish the imagination; but all this, in devotional music, is comparatively of little account.

121. Appropriate feeling, whether in the composer or the performer, is the only proper basis of expression. In sacred music, especially, nothing can be achieved without it. The same principle applies here which prevails elsewhere, in the fields of rhetoric and elocution.

122. A man who speaks with a vacant mind, or a mind chiefly occupied with words, or phrases, or attitudes, or a mind embarrassed by the difficulties of his argument, or by the inattention of his hearers—such a man will not be eloquent. He will be destitute of power. We may pity him or sympathize with him in reference to his perplexities; but the proper influence of his address would be defeated. Precisely the same is the case of the vocalist in reference to the pathos of his art. If he wishes to move us in any moral point of view, he must himself be moved. If he wishes, in devotional song, to stir us up to holy activity, he must sing in the demonstration of the Spirit, and in the beauty of holiness.

123. Music has indeed a language of narration and description which belong more properly to the field of imagination. Some of the strongest musical efforts are here to be met with; but in proportion as the subject of song becomes lyrical, in the moral sense of the word, the principle of which we now speak, rises in importance.

124. Music, it is true, may be cultivated like other arts of an analogous character, such as painting and poetry. Yet, if we would act intelligently, we should have constant reference to the object to which music is to be applied. The mere historic painter would not acquire his ideas and illustrations of Christian character from the circles that oppose christianity or treat it with cold indifference. Nor would the aspirant to the holy office of the ministry, take his lessons in sacred eloquence from the unhallowed walls of a theatre.

Common sense shows the application of the same principle in reference to the Christian vocalist.

125. But, because feeling is the basis of musical expression, it must not be inferred that no importance is attached to the superstructure. The habits of singers, in general, have become sophisticated, and must, therefore, be taken thoroughly to task.

126. In the first place, the instinctive tones of passion must be inculcated anew. Four distinctions may here be enumerated, as exhibiting so many given forms of emphasis.

127. A loud tone, slightly tremulous, without increase or diminution of intensity, and abrupt both at the commencement and termination, is appropriate to sentiments of alarm or of great vehemence or earnestness. This tone has some faint resemblance to the cry of 'Fire,' as heard in our cities and villages. When applied to such stanzas as set forth the awful sanctions of religion, it has, under the influence of appropriate feeling in the singers, a very solemn and powerful effect. When used as the mere result of thoughtless musical animation, it has a different tendency which is seldom to be commended, if ever to be tolerated.

128. A tone, loud at the commencement, but rapidly diminishing in intensity, is appropriate to expressions of joy and gladness, and lively gratitude. Several passages in Psalms 103 and 116, for instance, require the application of this kind of emphasis.

129. A tone, soft at the commencement, rapidly increasing in intensity, and abrupt at the termination, is properly applied to sentiments which are bold, lofty, or ironical. Such words as

"O for a shout of sacred joy,"—

"All hail the pow'r of Jesus' name,"— and especially such stanzas as the following :

"Our Lord is risen from the dead,
Our Jesus is gone up on high;
The pow'rs of hell are captive led,
Dragg'd to the portals of the sky,"— derive great assistance from this form of the emphasis. No other form will answer the purpose required, and without it the music will fail in expression. This emphasis is often grossly misapplied by professional or undevout singers, to the hinderance of all just expression.

130. A tone, soft and delicate at the commencement and the termination, but embracing a rapid crescendo and diminuendo, or simple swell, is required for pathetic passages, and even for the lighter shades of tenderness. Psalms 51st and 90th, L. M., e. g., require this emphasis. And it is equally needed in such words as

"Come, Holy Spirit, come,"—

"O for a closer walk with God,"—

"Come hither, all ye weary souls," &c.

The delicacy of the tone and the power of the swell must depend on the nature and strength of the sentiment.

131. The four forms of the emphasis thus described, are fundamental in musical expression. Still, as we have already seen, they are not to be employed mechanically. System is necessary in reducing them to practice, and they should be rendered familiar as properties of style by persevering practice. Yet, in the office of devotional song, they are, like other things, to be under the influence and direction of appropriate feeling. On any other plan, the exercise will necessarily degenerate either into dulness or affectation.

132. Without any immediate reference to the spiritual claims of religion, we may here infer, scientifically, the importance of maintaining right sentiments and feelings, in our schools of cultivation, which have for their object the promotion of church music. It is a fundamental principle in oratory, e. g., that the speaker must enter, in an earnest and dignified manner, into the full merits of his subject, if he would make a due impression upon his hearers; and the principle holds equally true in sacred music. Shame and confusion of face to the man who would set aside this principle!

133. In the second place, we may refer to loudness and softness as properties which have much influence over the emotions. We allude not to that loud strain of enunciation which stuns the ears of the devout listener, or to that feebleness of manner which savors of indolence and inefficiency; but to that occasional increase and diminution of volume which the changes of sentiment naturally suggest in music as in oratory, or in animated conversation. The same leading principle prevails here as in the application of emphasis. Changes which are merely mechanical, like the stops of an organ, will be comparatively of little avail.

134. The voice, in reference to such changes of volume, requires much discipline. Some voices are found to lose all their sweetness when the volume increases, and others to falter and break in the act of diminution. This is owing simply to the want of appropriate practice. Persons, laboring under such difficulties, may gradually overcome them by a little perseverance.

135. In the third place, we would mention variations of time. We here refer neither to the specific time of a given movement, nor to those unintentional aberrations from strict time, which arise through want of skill, and which detract so much from the interest of ordinary execution. The latter are sufficiently disastrous without the encouragement of theoretical sanction. Yet delicate changes, which correspond with the variations of sentiment in a psalm or hymn, are occasionally of much use, when skilfully managed.

136. These changes or variations may sometimes be gradual and sometimes sudden. They should be intentional, yet seem to be almost involuntary, as the natural expressions of sentiment. Passages of a delicate and tender character are generally the ones to be retarded, while such as are of a joyous nature may be accelerated. Slow tunes are the best for these purposes. Those which are quick and rhythmical scarcely admit of such variations. This last remark should never be forgotten.

137. In the fourth place, we would mention the legato and staccato styles of enunciation. The first of these is, when the musical notes are sustained to their full length, and sung in close connection; the second is, when they are abbreviated, as in the case of marks of distinction. In the one case, the sounds seem to flow in a free and polished manner, and in the other, to have some approximation to the character of speech. The legato style is of a tender character; the staccato is appropriate to lively description or narration.

138. The legato style requires skilful management. Among ordinary singers it often degenerates into dulness and languor, and is found to injure the articulation. It is often connected also with an inappropriate emphasis. Special cultivation will gradually remove these difficulties.

139. The staccato style is liable, in ordinary performances, to injure the accent, and at the same time to sunder the syllables of words. These difficulties may, with a little practice, be easily avoided.

140. The two properties we have just now considered, are of great importance, both as they refer to tunes and to the words of a psalm or hymn. The one is often exchanged for the other during a single performance, which embraces some varieties of sentiment.

141. In the fifth place, we would observe, that there is much in the general character of a movement in respect to time, which relates to expression. This influence is distinct from that to which we referred in article 135. The variations which we there described, are, perhaps, of too delicate a nature to be attempted with entire success by ordinary choirs. But, to sing a tune throughout, in a fast or slow manner, according to the directions of a skilful leader, is no very difficult matter.

142. In general, those sentiments which are delicate and plaintive, require a slow movement, while those which are of a joyous character, as elsewhere observed, require quicker time. Much also depends on the current of thought suggested by the words sung. The stanza,

“Salvation, O the joyful sound,”

e. g., requires a vivacious movement, and the last stanza of the same hymn, a movement more rapid ; while the intervening second stanza, requires, obviously, a slow movement. This, however, is an uncommon example : less differences will usually suffice.

“ Buried in sorrow and in sin,”—

143. It remains in the sixth place to speak of punctuation. The importance of punctuation in language is universally admitted. Why then should it ever be disregarded in song ? The vocal art consists not in destroying language, but in enforcing it. That there are some examples of unsuccessful effort in respect to this property of style, is readily acknowledged. Men have often failed here, from whom better things ought to have been expected. This proves the importance of being governed by correct principles of taste.

144. It has been stated, as a general rule in church music, that “ the scanning of the poetry and the rhythm of the music are not to be frustrated.” Against this rule there will, of course, be occasional exceptions. But the rule should never be forgotten, or set aside for slight reasons.

145. Chanting, as now performed in the Episcopal churches, is a thing by itself. There, there is no poetic measure and no musical rhythm, except at the cadences, to be observed or violated. The same is true of unmeasured recitative in anthems and oratorios. Yet, even here, there are bounds of some kind which ought not to be surpassed. The strong tendencies towards regularity in measure and movement, should be kept in mind. Even oratory, under the laws of modern elocution, has its rules of time and measure.

146. In metrical psalmody, where the same tune is sung in a multitude of stanzas, embracing endless diversities of punctuation, there will, of course, be some difficulty in management. If the tune in hand be not too rapid, momentary pauses, commas, dashes, and semicolons may be sufficiently observed, by shortening a note as in the act of breathing, while the calculation of time is unbroken. Longer pauses than these, when they occur at the end of a line, or middle of a stanza, may be easily managed, especially in the old parochial melodies, where a suspension of the voice is generally allowed when necessary, though not always written. But, lines like the following, form an exception to these rules :

“ He dies ! The heav’ns in mourning stood !”—

“ ’Tis finish’d ! so the Saviour cried.”—

“ The Lord is come ! The heav’ns proclaim
His birth : the nations learn his name.”

It would not answer to sing “ He dies the heav’ns,” nor “ ’Tis finish’d so,” which, of course, would destroy the sense. Exclamations so impassioned, may well be sung as if the music contained a written rest or indefinite pause, (∞). To neglect the punctuation in such cases, will do violence both to the language and the sentiment.

147. From the properties we have thus enumerated under the title of this section, it will appear evident why an expressive singer is so seldom found among the teachers, schools, and choirs of our country. The art implies skill and taste, and feeling and appropriate cultivation ; while, yet, it is extensively undervalued, misapprehended, and treated with neglect. Teachers should study this subject with the most untiring assiduity, and take unwearied pains in reducing their knowledge to practice. The same systematic efforts, however, will be expected in vain from the generality of their pupils. The latter will acquire much by imitation, and avail themselves of occasional hints and observations. This, by no means, lessens the responsibilities of a teacher, but rather enhances them.

148. The properties which relate to expression, are employed in successions and combinations, as diversified as are the varieties of thought or changes of emotion. One of the lines above cited,—

“ Buried in sorrow and in sin,”—

e. g., requires at once a slow movement, and legato style of enunciation, the pathetic form of the emphasis, the observance of a comma at the word “ sorrow,” the diminution of the musical accent at the word "and," &c.; all of which is evident, simply from the true method of reading it. The second line in the same stanza,—

"At hell's dark door we lay,"— has the farther peculiarity of requiring the alarm emphasis strongly marked at the second, third, and fourth words successively—"hell's dark door."

149. From this view of the subject of expression, we readily infer that entire perfection in style is impossible. Nor can there be among different teachers or leaders any thing like exact uniformity of manner. General rules, with specific examples and illustrations, are, nevertheless, of great use; as, also, are occasional hints and suggestions. The rest must be left, so far as teachers are concerned, to individual taste and discrimination. Every good teacher, like the accomplished orator, will still have his defects and peculiarities. None are infallible. All should, therefore, exercise a spirit of kindness and forbearance.

150. The cultivation of sound principles and appropriate feelings, will do much towards forming, under the careful hand of discipline, an expressive singer. The practice of studying the psalms and hymns, and reading them aloud with impassioned tones and feelings, is one of the highest utility. This is a delightful exercise to the devotional mind, and one that should be often repeated. The habit of good reading, we might almost say, needs only to be transferred to song, in order to secure the great ends of impassioned enunciation. This is a principle of unspeakable importance to leaders and teachers. It will save an incalculable amount of time in the drilling exercises.

151. Verbal recitations, by the teacher in his school, after the manner just mentioned, will afford the most effective illustrations to the young pupil in vocal music. All will feel the powers of language when thus presented, and be easily persuaded to endeavor to set them to music.

152. In the present collection of tunes, we have, without lessening the quantity of music, inserted a large variety of entire hymns with musical references, for the convenience of special practice. It is not presumed that these references will, in every instance, be closely followed, (see article 149.) They are offered only as general hints, illustrative of our own views of the subject. The references, being either musical characters or initials of technical terms, will be easily understood.—The following explanations, however, may not be unacceptable to our readers.*

	Staccato ,—distinct.	ex.	Expressivo ,—expressive.
(—)	Legato ,—in close connection.	f.	Forte ,—loud.
aff.	Affetuoso ,—with tender affection.	ff.	Fortissimo ,—very loud.
ag.	Agitato ,—agitated, as in the alarm emphasis.	m.	Moderato ,—moderate.
cr.	Crescendo ,—increase of sound.	ma.	Masloso ,—with majesty.
di.	Diminuendo ,—decrease of sound.	p.	Piano ,—soft.
d.	Dolce ,—soft and sweet.	p.p.	Pianissimo ,—very soft.
		vi.	Vivace ,—lively.

The dash (—) shows that a reference relates to some portion of a line.

153. In conclusion of this Section, we would simply remark, that the enunciation must not become stiff, formal, labored, harsh, fitful, or interrupted. The words in song should seem to flow as the spontaneous breathings of pious sentiment.

SECTION VII.—MISCELLANEOUS OBSERVATIONS.

154. A word as to the graces in music. Any thing of this kind which would be inconsistent with the claims of chaste simplicity, would be out of place here. Secular music tolerates an ever-changing variety of embellishments; yet, even here, they should seem to come unsought, like beautiful figures in rhetoric. Solos admit of some latitude in this respect; but, in devotional church music, artificial embellishments can find little place. The greatest labor is to cultivate simplicity.

* We copy from the Christian Psalmist, a Manual of Psalms and Hymns, compiled by the editor of this work, in connection with Rev. Dr. PATTON.

155. Instrumental accompaniments in church music, should be mere accessories to the voice. In the present state of the art, the organist often feels constrained to overwhelm the voices for the purpose of drowning the jargon. Is this singing the praise of God? or is it solemn mockery? The organist is not the only responsible person in such circumstances. The church are bound to prevent the dilemma, by vocal cultivation. Other instruments have less power, and while kept in skilful hands, are less liable to abuse.

156. Hinderances to the cultivation of style are very various. The extensive abuse of instruments is one; the strong predilection for secular music is another. Wrong notions of personal talent and obligation, strong prejudices, disastrous experiments, indolent habits, ignorance, bad instruction, the exhibitions of a bad taste, unprincipled management, are but items in the catalogue of hinderances. When professors of religion will undertake thoroughly to discharge their obligations in reference to the duty and privilege of sacred praise, practical hinderances will begin to disappear.

157. The right classification of voices in a choir, is a matter of much moment. The heaviest parts should be treble and base. The part intended for the highest female voices, is, in this work, placed immediately above the base staff, while the next higher staff is for second treble, and the upper one for tenor. Voices should be disciplined awhile before they are permanently distributed in the various parts of the score. Each person should then for the most part be confined to his own staff. The tenor, especially, should not be suffered to sing the air in connection with the treble voices. This practice is wholly subversive of the laws of harmony. Gentlemen, whose voices are high, should be taught to sing the air of course: How else shall they become leaders and teachers? But exercises for this purpose should not be in connection with treble voices, which sing the same melody an octave higher. See Part I, Section III.

158. It remains only to speak of the adaptation of tunes to particular psalms or hymns. We formerly bestowed a page or two on this subject in Musica Sacra, to which we beg leave to refer our readers. See, also, the two volumes of the Musical Magazine, recently published by the author of this work. Most of the topics of this second part of the rudiments are there expanded with discussions and illustrations. The tunes on the following pages, we trust, will afford instructive examples of this species of adaptation. Principles without practice and experience will be of little use. Tunes which at the first glance might seem to embrace great uniformity of character, will, on farther investigation, be found to present a multitude of dissimilarities. A nice observer will perceive, for instance, a wide difference of character between "Old 100" and "Luther's Hymn." The one is adapted to tranquilizing thoughts and emotions; the other, to such only as are of a spirit-stirring character. Discriminations of this nature will be continually suggesting themselves to the careful, intelligent observer.

159. But, finally, let no one presume to undervalue the subject of style, on account of its difficulties. Teachers and leaders especially should be willing to inform themselves, and to bestow special labor in the practice of devotional music. The cause is precious. If God is to be honored and glorified in the office of sacred praise, among the assemblies of his people; then it is evident that nothing which relates to the subject should be deemed unimportant.

160. At the same time there is such a thing as being unreasonably fastidious. Good common sense should be brought into exercise, if we would manage with due discretion. Ordinary performers will be deficient, in knowledge, in skill, in zeal, in punctuality, perhaps even in kindness and condescension. Great simplicity of style also is required by the general deficiency of taste which prevails in a congregation. A leader's task, therefore, in the present state of society, is as arduous as it is responsible: but, when executed faithfully, as in the fear of God, it will not fail of a gracious reward from the great Master of Assemblies, who has said, "Whoso offereth praise, glorieth me."

The image displays 32 fragments of an octave, each consisting of a five-line musical staff with a single note. The fragments are numbered 1 through 32. The notes are arranged in a sequence that covers the entire octave, with each fragment representing a different pitch. The fragments are grouped into rows: the first row contains fragments 1-5, the second row contains 6-10, the third row contains 11-17, the fourth row contains 18-22, the fifth row contains 23-25, the sixth row contains 26-28, and the seventh row contains 29-32. The notes are written in a simple, clear style, and the fragments are separated by vertical bar lines. The first fragment (1) is labeled with 'FAW, SOL, &c.' and 'DO, RE, &c.' below it, indicating the starting point of the octave.

This section contains 18 musical exercises, numbered 33 through 50. They are arranged in four rows. Each exercise is written on a single five-line staff. Exercises 33, 34, and 35 are on the first row. Exercises 36, 37, 38, 39, and 40 are on the second row. Exercises 41, 42, 43, 44, and 45 are on the third row. Exercises 46, 47, 48, 49, and 50 are on the fourth row. The exercises consist of various rhythmic patterns using eighth and sixteenth notes, often with rests.

SECTION II.--Fragments of the Octave in notes of dissimilar lengths, rests, &c. See Part I, Sections II and IV. In practice, let the sounds, in the first place, be rendered familiar; after which, beating with the regular accent, should be introduced.

FAW, LAW, SOL, &c.
DO, MI, SOL, &c.

This section contains 11 musical exercises, numbered 1 through 11. They are arranged in three rows. Exercises 1, 2, and 3 are on the first row. Exercises 4, 5, 6, and 7 are on the second row. Exercises 8, 9, 10, and 11 are on the third row. The exercises are more complex than the previous ones, featuring various note values (quarter, eighth, sixteenth notes), rests, and accidentals. Exercise 1 includes a key signature change to one sharp (F#) and a time signature change to 2/4. Exercises 4, 5, 6, and 7 include a key signature change to one flat (Bb). Exercises 8, 9, 10, and 11 include a key signature change to two flats (Bb and Eb). The exercises are designed to be played with a regular accent.

SECTION III.--Fragments of the Octave transposed; in which the first note occupies the first space of the staff. See Part I, Section II. First, let the names of the syllables be spoken; second, let them be sung; and, finally, let the time and accent be carefully regulated by the beats.

SECTION IV.--Intended as an easy exercise in pointed notes; the Octave commencing still in the first space, as in the last Section. The slur (—) here embraces the value of the note to be illustrated.

Moderato. Legato.

The musical score is written on four staves. The first three staves are in treble clef, and the fourth is in bass clef. The key signature has two flats (B-flat and E-flat), and the time signature is 2/2. The music is in a moderate, legato tempo. The lyrics are written below the staves, aligned with the notes. The score includes a repeat sign after the first measure of each staff. The lyrics are: "Life is the time to serve the Lord, The time t'en-sure the great re-ward; And while the lamp holds out to burn, The vil - est sin - ner may re-turn." The score ends with a double bar line.

Life is the time to serve the Lord, The time t'en-sure the great re-ward; And while the lamp holds out to burn, The vil - est sin - ner may re-turn.

SEBASTIAN. L. M.

Derived from the Gregorian Chant.

Four staves of music in 2/2 time, key of D major. The melody is on the first staff, with accompaniment on the second, third, and fourth staves. The lyrics are written below the second staff.

My spi-rit sinks with-in me, Lord, But I will call thy grace to mind; And times of past dis-tress re-cord, When I have found my God was kind.

Come, gracious Lord, descend and dwell
By faith and love in every heart;
That we may know, and taste, and feel,
The joys thy presence can impart.

Confirm our souls with inward strength,
May we the Saviour's fulness prove,
And understand the breadth and length,
And height and depth, of boundless love.

3.
Now to the God whose hand can do
Wonders beyond our power to know,
Be everlasting honors shown
By all the church through Christ his Son.

Which makes thy darkness bright:
Pursue his praise, Till sovereign love
In worlds above, Thy glory raise.
4. There on his holy hill
A brighter Sun shall rise,
And with his radiance fill
Those fairer, purer skies:
While round his throne Ten thousand stars,
In nobler spheres His influence own.

2. I tried each earthly charm—
 In pleasure's haunts I stray'd—
 I sought its soothing balm—
 I ask'd the world its aid;
 But ah! no balm it had
 To heal a wounded breast,
 And I, forlorn and sad,
 Must seek another rest;
 My days of happiness are gone,
 And I am left to weep alone.

3. Where can the mourner go,
 And tell his tale of grief?
 Ah! who can soothe his wo,
 And give him sweet relief?
 Thou, Jesus! canst impart,
 By thy long wish'd return,
 Ease to this wounded heart,
 And bid me cease to mourn;
 Then shall this night of sorrow flee,
 And I rejoice, my Lord, in thee.

* This piece requires great delicacy of execution, particularly the first line of the first and third strains. Let the Tenor, Alto and Base be drilled together on these passages, till they acquire the right intonation, and the right balance of voice; and when the Treble voices are added, let them observe a special characteristic which is indicated by the slur. See Rudiments. The organist on his part, should, by taking the chords $\frac{6}{4}$ and $\frac{6}{4}$ which here occur with his left hand, play them precisely as they are sung. The music should also have a strong accent.

RECOMMENDATIONS

The subscribers having been appointed a committee of the "Board of Officers of the New York Academy of Sacred Music," to examine the "Manhattan Collection of Psalm and Hymn Tunes, &c.," edited by Mr. Thomas Hastings, and published by D. FANSHAW, find it to contain a large number of new and excellent pieces, among which are very many of peculiar metres, in every variety of measure, and that the pieces, original or selected, are not surpassed for harmony or melody by those of any work in use, and are particularly adapted for the practical purposes of devotional service in the church or lecture room.

I most cheerfully concur in the opinion of the committee, above expressed, in relation to the Manhattan Collection of Sacred Music, excepting such pieces only as bear my own signature.

S. B. BOND, Vocal Leader of the N. Y. Academy of Sacred Music.

MR. EZRA COLLIER.—Dear Sir: Please accept my sincere thanks for the copy of the Manhattan Collection you sent me. I have examined it enough to be satisfied that it is the best book of the kind that has yet been published, and I hope it will have an extensive circulation.

Yours respectfully,

Springfield Mass., Oct. 23, 1837.

From Rev. J. W. Alexander, Professor of Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres in the College of New Jersey.

MR. EZRA COLLIER—SIR: I have spent some time in examining the work, and I have no hesitation in declaring my cordial esteem of the whole production. For originality and novelty it stands in the very first rank.

➡ D. FANSHAW, 575 Broadway, New York, keeps constantly for sale, a large assortment of Sacred Music for the use of Churches, Choirs, Societies, and Individuals, and also for the purposes of Elementary Instruction. Also, Psalm and Hymn Books.

The contributions of the distinguished Editor himself, are characterized by graceful tenderness of style, and easy melody, equally remote from the repetition of hackneyed themes, and the pedantic display of perplexed and impracticable passages. The happy adaptation of sentiments from sacred poetry is equal to any thing I have seen; and I cannot forbear to say, that in the preliminary "rudiments," Mr. Hastings has given us the plans of a mature experience, expressed in a manner which of itself might justly rank him among our most pleasing and impressive writers.

I am, respectfully, yours,
JAMES W. ALEXANDER.
College of New Jersey, November 14, 1837.

The compiler has given evidence of a fine taste and sound judgment, by the introduction of that species which produces an astonishing effect, and is at the same time so simple as to come within the range of ordinary choirs. Like some of the most admired specimens of ancient architecture, the design is plain, but the workmanship of the most finished character.

Respectfully,
SAMUEL PARMENTER,
Organist of St. George's Church, Newburgh, N. Y.

Mr. Hastings has just published a new Singing Book, in the usual form, of 252 pages, which he names the "Manhattan Collection." It is printed by Collier in a very distinctly legible and beautiful style. As to the music, every body who is acquainted with the author's taste will expect to find it full of the sweetest strains. The pieces generally are very easy of performance, and yet peculiarly effective.—Journal of Commerce.

The name of the author is a sufficient warrant for the excellence of the work.—N. Y. Observer.

This beautifully printed work contains two hundred and ninety tunes, and is one of the best works for singers extant. The distinguished character of Mr. Hastings in his profession renders any more particular commendation unnecessary.—Gospel Witness.
